

An Evaluation of the Balance of Trade: Exports and Imports of Small Arms and Light Weapons, Parts and Ammunition in Latin America and the Caribbean, 2000-2005

PART I: REGIONAL ANALYSIS

1. Introduction

According to the Small Arms Survey 2006, in a list of countries that exported at least USD 10 million worth of small arms and light weapons (SALW) in 2003, two Latin American countries appear (Brazil and Mexico), in a total of 32 countries.¹ Brazil, however, figures among the six countries in the world which exported more than USD 100 million.² On the imports side, Latin America three countries which declared more than USD 10 million appear (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela), out of a total of 39 countries.³ The region was responsible for 5% of world exports in 2003, which totaled USD 2 billion.⁴ According to Small Arms Survey, Russia and the United States alone exported USD 801 billion worth of arms. Latin America may not be one of the most relevant actors on the international small arms and light weapons (SALW) market; nevertheless, gathering and analyzing information regarding these products' external commerce is of extreme importance in a region which, according to recent studies, concentrates 42% of homicides caused by firearms in the world.⁵

The purpose of this report is to inform about the movement of SALW imports and exports, ammunition and parts during the current decade, from the perspective of the information provided by the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean.⁶ Based on customs declarations the countries handed to the United Nations, the questions answered in this report are: who bought? From whom? What? And when?

⁶ When we refer to Latin America and the Caribbean, we consider the following countries and territories: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guiana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela; United States dependencies: Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands; French overseas territory: French Guiana, Guadeloupe and Martinique; Netherlands dependencies: Aruba and Netherlands Antilles; e British colonies: Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Montserrat, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Turks and Caicos Islands. There are 32 countries and 14 territories under foreign administration, totalizing 46 different regions.

It is important to highlight that we do not pretend to understand with this report the reasons why Latin American countries sold or bought SALW. We know however that this is an important question, above all because the region has one of the highest rates of firearm related homicides in the world. Beyond informing, we do hope to trigger, by means of the information offered, the curiosity of other researchers, activists and state civil servants so that they can further investigate the transparency of these data as well as who is using these imported and exported arms, and how.

The data used in this report were collected from the database of NISAT – Norwegian Initiative on Small Arms Transfers, which stores more than 800,000 SALW transaction registries, from 1962 onwards. NISAT also works with different sources of data, among them UN-COMTRADE - United Nations Commodity Trade Statistics Database.⁷ We decided to use only data from UN COMTRADE for this report because, supposedly, all countries report their commercial transactions to the UN. These data are declared through a Harmonized System – HS – of commodity classification. The HS has been in existence since 1992 and was updated in 1996, 2002 and 2007. On the period analyzed, we are working with data up to 2005, since until the research's completion this was the last available year at NISAT.

We work with monetary values, since most countries declare their transactions in US dollars, as well as with the commodity's weight, yet only a small minority of countries declares the quantity of products commercialized. An important point to be considered is which categories of the HS were used in the research. The SALW, spare parts and ammunition were divided by type, each one of them corresponding to a category from the group of codes of the HS. The types were classified following a similar standard than that used by NISAT.

Table 1 – Classification of SALW, spare parts and ammunition:

HS Code	Type
930200	Pistols & Revolvers
930320	Sporting & Hunting Rifles
930330	Sporting & Hunting Shotguns
930100	Military Weapons
930190	Military Rifles, Machineguns, & others
930120	Grenade launchers, Flame Throwers & others
930621+ 930630	Small arms ammunition
930510	Parts & accessories of revolvers or pistols
930521	Shotgun barrels
930529	Parts & accessories of shotguns or rifles

Apart from the non-notification of quantities, the COMTRADE data suffer from two limitations derived from the changes made to the classification system and from the sub-notification or purely incorrect notification of certain categories by some countries. For alleged national security reasons it is very common for customs to omit communicating import and exports destined to the armed forces and to the public security force. These data usually correspond to HS code 930100 (military weapons). On the other hand, until 2002 all conventional firearms, including heavy armament (such as artillery pieces for example) were jumbled into code 930100. As of 2002, the military weapons category was split into code 930190 - which includes small military arms such as machineguns, sub-machine guns, assault rifles and military shotguns - and code 930120 - which includes light weapons, such as grenade launchers, portable anti-tank arms, etc. This means that, since 2002 and when the countries declared them, it has been possible to separate light conventional arms from heavy ones. For data prior to 2002, the risk always exists that, within code 930100 one also finds data on heavy armament. To alleviate this problem the data declared in code 930100 have been compared with the international heavy weapons transfer database of the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute – SIPRI. The coinciding entries between the NISAT and the SPRI data have been disregarded and eliminated from the sample. These cases are indicated in footnotes in the report.

There are also limitation regarding the sub-notification and misclassification of some categories by some states. Some of these problems were identified in previous research works and are pointed and corrected in this report. It should be also considered that the category “sporting and hunting rifles” may include the import and export of semi-automatic versions of assault rifles which are produced for the civilian market.

The report is divided into two parts: the first one compares the commercial balance of SALW, spare parts and ammunition of Latin America and the Caribbean with the world according to importer, exporter and types of products. The second part is a supplement that presents specific data on this type of commerce individually, country by country.

2. Balance of trade:

According to the objective of this work, exports of SALW, parts and ammunition that took place in the first half of the first decade of the 21st century in Latin America and the Caribbean will be detailed below. During the period analyzed, the countries in the region analyzed exported USD 615 million in light and small arms, parts and ammunition. On the other hand, during this same period the region imported USD 431 million of these artifacts. The year 2005 had the largest volume of exports (USD 130 million), while imports were more voluminous in 2001: USD 85 million. We should stress that since 2002, Latin America and the Caribbean have been registering a positive balance in the balance of trade, as shown in graph 1.

Graph 1 – Latin America and the Caribbean: balance of trade of SALW, parts and ammunition, in current USD, 2000 - 2005.

Notes: Exports from categories of HS 930330 (sport and hunting rifles) and 930621 (cartridges for shotguns) from Brazil to Malaysia in 2002 have been excluded. Imports from categories of HS 930100 (military weapons) from Italy, the United Kingdom and the USA to Brazil in 2000 and 2001 have been excluded.

Imports from categories of HS 930100 (military weapons) from Italy to Venezuela in 2000 have been excluded.

In the previous graph, the balance of trade is presented in general way so that it can be situated in the international market. Nevertheless, in order to observe how the Latin American and Caribbean market is formed, it is fundamental to know which are the exporters and importers of light and small arms in the region.

3. Exports of the region:

In table 2 and graph 2, the predominance of Brazil as the main exporter in Latin America and the Caribbean is very evident. Alone, the country comprises more than 82% of exports, registering a volume of USD 502 million.⁸ In fact, based on NISAT data from the year 2003, in 2006 Brazil was classified among the first six exporters of SALW.⁹ The other countries in Latin America and the Caribbean comprise 18% of exports, of which Mexico, Argentina and Chile represent 9.5%, 5.9% and 1.3%, respectively. The rest of the countries together comprise 1.6% of the total exported by the region during the period.

Table 2 – Latin America and the Caribbean: export of SALW, parts and ammunition by country, in current USD, 2000 - 2005.

⁸ It is important to make an exception: In 2002, a total of USD 66 million in exportations to Malaysia was disregarded because, as was explained in previous research, there is strong evidence that heavy arms were included in the sport and hunting rifle categories (930330) and ammunition for small arms (930621) from HS to this country. 4. Imports of the region:

Unlike export, there is no predominance of any country in the imports of the region. However, the five major importers comprise 67% of the volume of imports. Mexico, Colombia, Argentina, Venezuela and Brazil represent 26%, 19%, 8%, 8% and 6%, respectively, of the total imported in the period between 2000 and 2005, as can be observed in graph 3 and table 3. The other countries in South America (identified in blue) represent 15% of the total imported, while countries in Central America (in pink) imported USD 53 million and the Caribbean countries (in green) imported USD 24 million - 12% and 5%, respectively, of the total imported.

The region has 46 countries and territories. Of these 25 have reported exports between 2000 and 2005 and 36 have reported imports during the same period. The main economies of the region – Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, Venezuela and Colombia – stand out in the volume of exports as well as in the volume of imports.¹⁰

5. Commercial partners of the region:

What are the commercial partners of Latin America and the Caribbean? During the period studied, there were 105 countries that were buyers of light and small arms, of which 32 are countries from the region itself. In table 4 it can be observed that the USA is the main buyer, absorbing 56% of exports originating in Latin America and the Caribbean. Colombia has 6% and Saudi Arabia 4%. These three countries together bought USD 407 million from the region, or 66% of what was exported between 2000 and 2005. If we take into account only the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean, the total sold was USD 106 million during the period, or 17% of the total exported.

In referring to imports by Latin America and the Caribbean – table 5 and graph 5 – the main exporter of arms for the region is the USA. Nevertheless, unlike exports, there is not such a large concentrations of arms originating in this country. Therefore, 36% of Latin American and Caribbean imports during the period are of North American arms, or USD 157 million. Arms exported by Italy represent 9% of the total volume, Brazil 8%, Spain 7% and Israel 6%. These countries together exported USD 275 million to the region, as declared by the Latin American and Caribbean countries. Besides the five major exporters of SALW (small arms and light weapons), parts and ammunition, the Czech Republic, Austria, South Africa and Sweden are worth mentioning. These countries reached totals of over USD 10 million during the period from 2000 to 2005. All the other exporting countries did not exceed 2% of the total imported by Latin America, except for Belgium, Mexico and Germany that exported more than 2% to the region.

Graph 5 – Top exporters of SALW, parts and ammunition to Latin America and the Caribbean, by partner in percentage, 2000 - 2005.

Notes: Imports from categories of HS 930100 (military weapons) from Italy, the United Kingdom and the USA to Brazil in 2000 and 2001 have been excluded.

Imports from categories of HS 930100 (military weapons) from Italy to Venezuela in 2000 have been excluded.

6. Inside the balance of trade: most marketed and traded products:

Graph 6 shows that two products comprise 3/4 of exports from the non-period region. They are: ammunition for small arms (930621 and 930630), with USD 233 million, or 37% of exports. Sporting and hunting shotguns (930320) represent 11% of the total, whose value reaches USD 68 million of imports. According to this graph, pistols and revolvers (930200) account for USD 34 million. A reader who doesn't know the international light and small arms market well or who doesn't know the Latin American and Caribbean market well, would perhaps not see anything wrong with this graph. But there is incorrect information derived from discrepancies in the data declared to COMTRADE by Brazil, the main exporter of the region and one of the main worldwide exporters of pistols and revolvers in the world. Further on we will show where the error is and point out a solution.

Notes: Exports from categories of HS 930330 (sport and hunting rifles) and 930621 (cartridges for shotguns) from Brazil to Malaysia in 2002 have been excluded.

In graph 7, the main products bought by Latin America and the Caribbean may be observed. As in the previous graph, ammunition for small arms is the main product sold in the region, with 26% of the total imported – USD 159 million – between 2000 and 2005. Pistols and revolvers represent 19% of the products imported, that is, USD 115 million of the total imported during the period. Arms for military use (930100 and 930190) correspond to 13% of the total imported by the region, with USD 81 million. The other products total USD 75 million, or 13% of the total purchases by Latin America and the Caribbean.

As was seen previously, the main exporter of arms of Latin America and the Caribbean is Brazil, and the USA is the main purchasing country of light and small arms coming from that region. In fact, Brazil is one of the main exporters of pistols and revolvers to the USA.¹¹ Commercial transactions between these two countries are the key point to understanding what is wrong with graph 6. If we check the export data of the Sporting and hunting rifle category (930330) of Brazil, and on the other hand if we notice the imports in the revolver and pistol category (930200) of the USA and compare them in the same graph (graph 8), it can be clearly seen that the import of pistols and revolvers (930200) declared by the United States, (considered by the Small Arms Survey the most transparent country in communicating information about the foreign trade of arms),¹² it is almost coincident with the amounts of Sporting hunting rifles (93030) declared by Brazil.

As the main exporter in Latin America, Brazil has ended up changing the actual scenario of exported products. We suggest the following procedure for correcting the data:

1. Disregard of category 933030 data (hunting and sporting rifles) only for Brazil.
2. Include these data in the 930200 category (pistols and revolvers).

We know from previous research that Brazil has companies such as Boito – E.R. Amantino, Rossi and CBC, that have limited production and export of hunting and sporting rifles, but we have no conditions to separate these products, even working with data of the commercial partners.¹³ Therefore, we decided to consider the entire 930330 category in 930200. We understand that it is a conservative decision, but nevertheless much closer to reality than the official statistics.

Graphic 6a (old graphic) has incorrectly classified data and graphic 6b (new graphic) offers corrected data, as suggested above. Clearly, with Brazil's leadership, pistols and revolvers (930200) appear now with the main SALWs exported by the region.

In this brief report we had the opportunity, starting from the perspective of what was declared by the countries and territories, to learn about the main producers and consumers of SALW, as well as the main commercial partners in Latin America and the Caribbean. Commercialized products were also analyzed and it was possible in this way to detect and learn about problems in the transparency of information, such as in the case of Brazilian declared as Sporting and hunting rifles. This information is amplified and detailed in a statistic supplement that presents what each country and territory reports as imported and exported as well as the destinations of these products.

Although Brazil doesn't declare pistols and revolvers exports, 51 countries declared a total of USD 194,143,351 in imports of these products to COMTRADE between 2000 and 2005. As explained in this report, and as it can be observed in the graph below, everything seems to indicate that Brazil misclassified pistols and revolvers under the category sporting and hunting rifles.
